

7. Ay me, she frowns

Francis Pilkington

Canto

Ay me! She frowns; my mis- tress is of- fen- ded. Oh par- don, Why low'r's my love and blots so sweet a beau- ty? Oh be ap-Still are you an- gry_and is there no re- lent- ing? Oh weigh my

Basso

[10]

dear, my miss shall be a- men- ded. My fault from love pro- ceed- ed; it peas'd with vows, with faith and du- ty. Give o- ver to be cru- el, sith woes; be mov'd with my la- ment- ing. A- las! My heart is griev- ed; mine mer- its grace the ra- ther. If I no dan- ger dread- ed, it kind- ness seems you bet- ter. You have but chang'd a jew- el, and in- ward soul doth sor- row. Un- less I be re- liev- ed, I was to win your fa- vor. Then clear those clouds, then smile on - love is not your debt- or. Then wel- come mirth, and ban- ish - die be- fore to- mor- row. The coast is clear'd, her coun- te- nance me, and let us be good friends. Come walk, come talk, moan; show pi- ty on your lov- er. Come play, come sport; cheer'd; I am a- gain in grace. Then fare- well fear;

[15]

[20]

[25]

[30]

come kiss, come see how soon our quar- rell ends.
the thing that's gone no sor- row can re- cov- er.
then come, my dear, let's dal- ly and em- brace.